The screenshot shows a YouTube video player for the video "Tesla Model S: 'Gallons of Light' Commercial" by Jordan Bloch. The video has 22,435 views, 465 likes, and 1 dislike. A red circle highlights the dislike button, with an orange arrow pointing to a small inset image of a man in a red shirt giving a thumbs-down gesture. Below the video player, there is a section for "editor's blog entry" featuring a profile picture of a man.

So, an advertising professional puts up an awesome video ad touting solar-charged driving and sun-powered Teslas on YouTube, within three days it hits 23,000 views and garners universal praise, along with 465 likes – and then some LOSER comes along and gives the video a thumbs down.

Say what!?

What's not to like about 100-percent emissions-free, solar-charged, oil-free driving?
